

STELLAR JOCKEYS APRIL NEWSLETTER

Welcome to the Stellar Jockeys newsletter for April 2022. This one is again spacer-themed but will be brief due to the inclusion of GIFs.

Uprezzing The Arlo

Following on from last month's spacer powersuit, what you see above is the Arlo spacer agrav at its new resolution in the Brigador Killers engine. To give you an idea of what the Arlo used to look like, here is the same vehicle at twice the normal camera zoom back in the original Brigador.

What should stand out is there's a noticeable increase in visual fidelity and several more greebles, so let's take a look at the final 3D render of the new Arlo for the finer details.

The upshot of a higher resolution means not only obvious details like weathering that couldn't be seen clearly before can now stand out, but also less obvious details like lifting points (one has to consider how such vehicles get hoisted on- and off-world and reflect that in the design, after all) as well as how such parts of the vehicle cast self shadows - all of which come together to better sell the "realness" of this fictional floating vehicle.

Lastly, the uprezzing to a "true" scale for BK has also resulted in making the agrav much more threatening than we'd anticipated. This last GIF definitely won't fit in this email (and ignore that the Arlo is corvid blue; it was a test render at the time) but check out this scene of what it's going to look like going up against an Arlo on the infantry scale.

Community Spotlight

We've only space to fit in just one for this month, but it's a good one. Flyingdebris decided to significantly expand on last month's concept art of a spacer tac rig with ceriseCisilipp's help. Presenting: Zeds of a feather.

This was not the only community content to be created this past month. As ever, the #becks_best channel on our Discord server has plenty more fan illustrations, videos and other delights.

Next Month

We're finishing up our current milestone and expect May's newsletter to bring some fresh updates about our progress on Brigador Killers. Thank you for sticking with us.
